Saudis promise U.S. not to raise oil prices

BEIRUT, July 26 (R). — The Arab-language magazine Al Mostakbal says Saudi Arabia has promised the United States not to raise its oil prices by more than five per cent annually until 1984. The Paris-based magazine, which reached here today, said that in return the U.S. pledged to give Saudi Arabia political, military and economic support. The weekly, which circulates throughout the Arab World, gave no sources for its story but said the pledges were part of a secret agreement Saudi Arabia had concluded with the previous administration of President Ford. It was later confirmed by President Carter, the magazine added.

Qadhafi calls for OAU meet

LONDON, July 26 (R). — Radio Uganda said today that Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi wanted an emergency meeting of the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) Ministerial Council to discuss what he called Egyptian aggression against his country. The radio, monitored here, said Col. Qadhafi disclosed this in a message to Ugandan President Idi Amin. President Amin yesterday asked the Libyan ambassador here for detailed information on what had led the two countries to fight one another. Col. Qadhafi said Egypt had committed a flagrant violation of the OAU charter and that the Libyan Jamahiriyah was being compelled to defend its people and territory.

Washington angered by Israel's legalisation of W. Bank settlements

WASHINGTON, July 26 (R). — The United States today told Israel that it was deeply disappointed by the decision of Begin's government to give legal recognition to these Israeli settlements on the West Bank. State Department spokesman Hodding Carter said the Israeli action not only contravened international legal conventions but also constituted an obstacle to the peace-making process.

"We are deeply disappointed by this development," the spokesman said in a department policy statement.

The statement was telephoned this morning to Israeli Ambassador Simcha Dinitz by Mr. Roy Atherton, who is to be Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern affairs.

The swift reaction followed a decision by the Israeli government to legalise three existing settlements on the West Bank: Kafz Qaddum, Ofra and Maale Adumin. The United States understood that the former government had refused to legalise at least one of these settlements, the spokesman said.

In a reference to last week's talks between President Carter and Prime Minister Menachem Begin, the spokesman added: "We have consistently made clear, including in our recent talks here in Washington, our view that the establishment of settlements on occupied territory is not only contrary to the Fourth Geneva Convention but also constitutes an impediment to Geneva and the peace process on the Middle East."

The strongly-worded disapproval of the Israeli action by a cabinet committee marked the first flare-up in U.S.-Israeli relations since Mr. Begin's visit here.

Lebanese, Palestinian guerrillas start to withdraw from S. Lebanon

SIDON, Lebanon, July 26 (R). — Warring Palestinian and Lebanese guerrillas have begun withdrawing from volatile regions in southern Lebanon, following an agreement aimed at ending fighting in the area.

The second stage would entail the withdrawal of "armed men" from southern Lebanon and their replacement by regular Lebanese troops.

The Palestine news agency Wafa reported that the Palestinian leadership yesterday formed a "Higher Security Committee" made up of all commando groups.

The committee urged all guerrilla organisations to designate a number of their men to join the Palestinian armed struggle command (PASC) -- the commandos' military police -- within 48 hours with the aim of organising "police patrols."

A special tribunal was set up to look into all complaints about disorderly activities, Wafa said.

The rightwing Phalangist newspaper Al Aam today greeted the new agreement with reservation, questioning whether all the commando groups would honour their pledges.

The Communist paper Al Nida said it would be premature to say everything had been settled.

Some voices are still being raised proclaiming that all agreements are useless and that the only solution will be to drive the Palestinians out of the country," Al Nida said.

North Yemen renews its call for Arab summit

SANA'A, July 26 (R). — North Yemen today renews its call for an urgent summit conference to discuss inter-Arab disputes, Middle East developments and the situation in the Horn of Africa.

A government statement said North Yemen wanted a full Arab summit and opposed all proposals to a restricted one because of the gravity of the issues to be discussed.

On June 1, North Yemen called for an Arab summit but the proposal failed to gain the support of Arab League members.

In its statement today North Yemen said it had expressed its concern over continued inter-Arab disputes which reached its climax with the Egyptian-Libyan border fighting.

North Yemen said that in addition it was concerned over the continued fighting in southern Lebanon and the deteriorating situation in the Horn of Africa where border fighting has been reported between Ethiopia and Somalia.

It left the agenda, date and venue of the proposed summit for Arab League Secretary General Mahmoud Riad to decide in consultation with league members.

King leaves for Iran

His Majesty King Hussein is seen off by His Highness Crown Prince Hassan as he left to Tehran Tuesday for a short private visit. King Hussein says war unavoidable if Mideast peace process fails AMMAN (JNA). — War and upheaval in the Middle East will be unavoidable if the process for peace fails, His Majesty King Hussein said in an interview with United Press International and released here in Arabic Tuesday. The United States should have a role to play in bringing peace to the area His Majesty said.

The King told UPI he hoped that U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance will bring with him a clear-cut American position regarding the Middle East after President Carter's series of talks with leaders of the area. Mr. Vance is due to visit Middle East states including Jordan early next month.

King Hussein warned that without sufficient preparations, especially by the United States, the Geneva peace conference will end with disappointing results.

The King emphasised that a solution to the Arab-Israeli dispute requires an Israeli withdrawal from Arab territories occupied in 1967, and recognition of the legitimate rights of Palestinian people in their homeland.

Referring to President Carter's call on Israel to pull out of the occupied Arab territories and for establishing a Palestinian homeland, King Hussein said that President Carter's courageous stand is encouraging. He said he cannot see any solution to the M.E. crisis without the return of the West Bank, the Gaza strip and other territories occupied by Israel in 1967.

King Hussein underlined the necessity of granting the Palestinian people their rights, including self-determination, and freedom of expression in everything connected with their link with Jordan. "Any relationship between the proposed Palestinian state and Jordan cannot take its final form unless it was freely determined by both Jordanians and Palestinians alike," the King added.

If Israel is not willing to evacuate the occupied Palestinian territories, the area would face a dangerous crisis, the King added.

King Hussein went on to say that in the case of failure of the American efforts to achieve a permanent and just peace to the Middle East, a wave of extremism would overrun the area and a state of despair and commotion would dominate it. The moderate parties would then find it very difficult to pursue policies which had brought no results.

The King said the situation in the south Lebanon can become a flashpoint of a new confrontation that could lead to disastrous consequences.

On the Egyptian-Libyan disputes and differences among other Arab countries, King Hussein feels deep sorrow. "To see Arab disunity recently reach such a delicate state during the present crucial stage," he expressed hope that these differences were only a passing cloud.

In the past 25 years of Jordan's life, King Hussein said that during this period "we were able to become a state. After 1967, we rose up to build a new Jordan. I hope that in the future, we would take a course in which our influence would be felt, and to assist, as much as possible in bringing about a permanent and just peace to the area -- an objective to which I am devoting my life."

As ceasefire holds Libyan-Egyptian front seen as explosive

CAIRO, July 26 (R). — President Anwar Sadat has demanded that the Libyan Jamahiriyah dismantle training camps which he said were used for sabotage raids against Egypt, a Palestinian source said today.

The source said that Arab mediators relayed the demand to Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi yesterday as part of a set of conditions for maintaining the fragile Egyptian ceasefire which has halted four days of border clashes and air attacks.

The Palestinian source said President Sadat had warned that this was the "last chance" to settle peacefully the quarrel between the two countries.

The source said that the Libyans have counter-charged that there were saboteurs in Egypt who "disturbed the peace" of the Libyan Jamahiriyah. Egypt has retorted that these were political refugees, not saboteurs, he said.

The source said that Palestinians close to mediation efforts by commando leader Yasser Arafat consider the situation between the two Arab neighbours is still "delicate and explosive."

Among President Sadat's demands is a halt to hostile propaganda between the two Arab neighbours, the source said.

But bitter exchanges between the two countries continued today.

The Palestinian source said Mr. Sadat also insisted that a joint Libyan-Egyptian committee should be formed to restore normal relations between the two countries, and that either Mr. Arafat personally or the Arab League as an organisation, should supervise it.

The Libyans suggested that Mr. Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) should be put in charge of the committee, the source said.

The Egyptian and Libyan governments have repeatedly accused each other of "sabotage."

Just before the border fighting began last week, Egypt accused the Libyans of colluding with an extremist group of Egyptian Moslems trying to overthrow President Sadat.

The Palestinian source said that, in an effort to settle the issue, Mr. Arafat and Algerian President Houari Boumediene proposed a joint agreement that "neither state should carry out any activity undermining the national security of the other."

President Sadat announced on Sunday, as he began talks with President Boumediene, that all Egyptian military operations against the Libyan Jamahiriyah would be halted.

President Boumediene had then just arrived in Alexandria from Tripoli, where he had held talks with Col. Qadhafi.

After six and a half hours of intensive talks in Alexandria, President Boumediene flew back to Tripoli yesterday for more talks with the Libyan leader. He flew home to Algiers today.

The semi-official Cairo newspaper Al-Ahram reported today that last Friday, the second of four days of fierce ground and air attacks between the two Arab neighbours, Egyptian planes destroyed a Libyan radar station at El-Adhem airbase near the Libyan port of Tobruk.

"The Egyptian armed forces headquarters has full information on all Soviet radar stations and bases in Libya and it is also aware that Libya has given the Soviets full authority to move freely inside Libya," it added in what appeared to be a warning that Egypt could destroy other such installations.

Iraq today sent its Minister of State Hamid Alghouri, to Alexandria to hand over a message from President Ahmed Hassan Al Bakr to President Sadat on the conflict.

Flights from Cairo to Tripoli remained suspended.

Sadat supports improved relations with Moscow

CAIRO, July 26 (R). — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat has told Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev that he supports all efforts to improve relations between the two countries provided there is no interference in each other's internal affairs, the official Middle East News Agency (MENA) reported today.

MENA said the two leaders exchanged messages to mark the recent anniversary of the revolution which toppled Egypt's monarchy.

In his message, President Brezhnev said: "The Soviet Union has always supported the Egyptian people's liberation struggle. The Soviet Union also supports joint efforts for the sake of strengthening mutual relations, taking into consideration the interests of both our people."

President Sadat replied: "Our people who strongly believe in fruitful and positive cooperation with all the people of the world fully support all efforts for improving relations with the Soviet Union and strengthening friendship bridges on the basis of mutual respect and without any interference in each other's internal affairs for the sake of their national interests, security and peace."

President Sadat, in a speech on July 16, referred to recent efforts to improve relations between the two countries and said: "The Soviet Union wanted to reestablish a friendship treaty and insisted we should pay for our arms needs in dollars."

Mr. Sadat said he replied: "No. I will not sign a new treaty. As for the arms, if I am going to pay dollars it would be better to buy from other sources which are much better by far."

"I am not going to give any special position in Egypt for any power in the world," he stated.

President Sadat last year abrogated a 15-year friendship treaty with Moscow.

Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy had talks with Mr. Brezhnev and Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in Moscow last month.

It was agreed then that Mr. Gromyko should make a return trip to Egypt in August. In view of President Sadat's recent criticism of the Soviet Union, it is not yet known whether this trip will materialise.

Italian-U.S. talks centre on Communists, economy

WASHINGTON, July 26 (R). — President Carter began talks today with Italian Prime Minister Giulio Andreotti and said the Italian government under his leadership was trusted as well as admired and respected.

His greeting underlined his confidence in the ability of Signor Andreotti's minority Christian Democratic government to survive without Communist participation, even though it depends on Communist parliamentary support.

Signor Andreotti said in an interview in U.S. News and World Report magazine this week that the issue of Communism in Italy "will be decided by the Italian people and not the United States."

Signor Andreotti said the two days of talks would also cover the international situation, Italy's dependence on imported oil and its efforts to combat inflation and unemployment.

Signor Andreotti's visit is his second to Washington since December, when he conferred with President Ford. At that time, Italy's economic and political situation was regarded here as unstable and uncertain.

U.S. to provide arms to Somalia

WASHINGTON, July 26 (R). — The United States has agreed in principle to provide arms for Somalia, the State Department said today.

Spokesman Hodding Carter said that the Somali request shows that it need not depend completely on the Soviet Union for its supplies.

Somalia approached the U.S. along with several other countries some months ago in an effort to diversify its arms purchases after intensified Soviet arms cooperation with Somalia's traditional rival, Ethiopia.

"We have indicated we would be prepared in principle to provide arms to Somalia along with other countries willing to which Somalia has been in contact," the spokesman added.

"But we do think it is significant that Somalia knows it is not dependent on the Soviet Union" and that it could obtain arms from other sources," he said.

He declined to name the other countries with which Somalia has contacts, but he said the United States had consulted with "some of our friends and allies" about the Somali request.

He made clear the United States did not back Somalia's territorial claims and "continues to support the Organisation of African Unity principle of territorial integrity of its member states."

Asked about the nature of military aid, he said grant aid was not under consideration but the United States might possibly make military sales under the easy repayment terms of the foreign military sales credits. He refused to say what sort of arms might be provided.

The administration's decision reflects the personal involvement of President Carter, who was reported to have reacted angrily when the Soviet Union supplanted the United States as arms supplier to Ethiopia.

The administration's decision in principle to give Somalia military aid is seen rather in the context of President Carter's stated intention to challenge the Soviet Union peacefully for influence in areas of the world that it feels are crucial now or potentially in the future.

Mr. Carter has discussed the situation in Somalia with Congressmen, editors and visiting statesmen in the past few months, reflecting an unusual personal interest in the affairs of the region.

In Nairobi, meanwhile, Ethiopia has accused Somalia of starting a full scale war by sending troops, tanks and planes across their border and says there has been heavy fighting with losses on both sides.

The Ethiopian News Agency (ENA) said in Addis Ababa that the Foreign Minister, Col. Dr. Felke Gedie-Ghiorgis, yesterday told diplomats and the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) that "the brazen acts of Somali aggression" began early on Saturday with military operations in the Ogaden desert area of southeast Ethiopia.

In another dispatch from Nairobi today, ENA quoted the Ethiopian National Revolutionary Operations Command as saying that regular and militia forces were engaged in heavy fighting with Somali forces and that five Somali MIG planes were shot down by the Ethiopian air force on Sunday and Monday.

The air force destroyed 30 tanks and armoured cars while ground forces captured one armoured vehicle and destroyed nine.

S. African police use tear gas to break demonstration

JOHANNESBURG, July 26 (R). — Police used tear gas to break up a demonstration by black pupils in Alexandria township here today as classroom unrest spread from Pretoria to Johannesburg.

Hundreds of black students abandoned their studies in Alexandria to protest against the detention of two students Monday night, a police spokesman said.

Police fired tear gas into the crowd and later called in riot police. But the township, populated by 60,000 blacks in an area of one square mile, was reported quiet this afternoon with police standing by.

One school was damaged during the demonstration and a woman was stoned, the spokesman said. It was not immediately known when the Alexandria pupils would resume studies.

The incidents coincided with a continuing boycott of classes by pupils in the Pretoria townships of Atteridgeville and Saulsville in a protest against South Africa's segregated educational system.

The pupils walked out yesterday and said they would not return until they had been given equal opportunity with whites.

South Africa's blacks are educated on the so-called Bantu education system, separately from white schooling.

There was no word on whether the boycotts would spread to Soweto, Johannesburg's biggest township. But student sources said militant black leaders there also wanted the separate education system scrapped.

A police spokesman said there had been no injuries or arrests in today's disturbances. The students have said the pupils are not striking or demonstrating but boycotting classes until black education is controlled by the Department of National Education.

Arab ambassadors in Washington optimistic about Geneva conference

WASHINGTON, July 26 (R). — Arab envoys expressed optimism here that the Geneva Middle East peace conference would be convened later this year.

The ambassadors of Egypt, Syria and Lebanon and the Charges d'Affaires of Saudi Arabia and Jordan held a half-hour meeting yesterday with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to discuss his coming Middle East trip and President Carter's talks last week with Israeli Prime Minister Meachem Begin.

"We are optimistic about the convening of the Geneva conference," Egyptian Ambassador Ashraf Ghourbel said afterwards. "But we are not by any means satisfied with Begin's stand."

Syrian Ambassador Sabah Kabbani said he agreed with Mr. Ghourbel.

Lebanese Ambassador Najati Khabbani, the senior Arab ambassador here, said the envoys had the impression that the U.S. administration would continue the policy publicly stated by President Carter.

He was apparently referring to calls for establishment of a Palestinian entity and for Israeli withdrawal to its borders before the 1967 Middle East war. These points were not mentioned in public statements here after the Begin visit.

Meanwhile in Tel Aviv the English-language Jerusalem Post said today that the apparent success of Mr. Begin's Middle East talks with President Carter might be abbreviated.

The newspaper added that Saudi Arabia, "the most important Arab state has not yet been heard from." All three confrontation states depended

U.S. company to help reorganise telecomms body

AMMAN (JNA). — An American company is to pave the way for the Telecommunications Corporation to work on a purely commercial basis. The president and a group of experts from Moorcom Tuesday met with Director General of the Telecommunications Corporation Mohammad Shahed Ismail to discuss how to achieve financial and administrative autonomy for the corporation. The company was chosen for its long experience in streamlining U.S. companies, in particular those working in the telecommunications field, Mr. Ismail said.

Supply delegation returns from Far East trade visit

AMMAN (JNA). — A Jordanian supply delegation returned here Tuesday at the end of a three-week tour of Far Eastern countries, during which a commercial protocol was signed with South Korea to increase trade. The delegation head, Minister of Supply Marwan Qasim, said that the delegation had met, during its tour of South Korea, Hong Kong, Japan and Taiwan, with the Korean prime minister and the ministers of commerce, agriculture and public works of the four countries visited. Discussion centred on ways to boost cooperation, in particular with South Korea, since Korean firms are presently implementing a number of development projects in the Jordan Valley. The supply delegation made deals worth $1 million with companies in South Korea and Hong Kong for the supply of goods for the Civil Service Consumers Corporation. Items include ready-made clothes, footwear, leather handbags, house utensils, blankets, stationery, toys and canned food. The delegation asked several firms in Taiwan and Japan to provide the Consumers Corporation with samples and prices of their products. Mr. Qasim concluded by saying he had invited the South Korean commerce minister to Jordan.

Time of reckoning

Let Israel not be deceived. The days when Israel was indulged and pampered at such exorbitant cost to peace in the Middle East are clearly over. Mr. Begin cannot go about unilaterally throwing up obstacles to a settlement, his election promises notwithstanding. The American reaction to the Israeli government's precipitate step in realising three highly contentious settlements on the occupied West Bank proves the seriousness of Mr. Carter's commitment to finding a real peace in the Middle East. By expressing "deep disappointment" and denouncing Israel's action as contravening the Geneva conventions and constituting an "obstacle to peace" the U.S. is proving its good faith, and delivering an unmistakable warning to the government of Mr. Begin that it can go only so far in exploiting the special relationship between the two countries. Mr. Begin had hardly shaken the Washington dust from his feet when the sophisticated witty diplomatist who so successfully wooed the American Press and public reverted to his natural character of the hardlining former terrorist. The Israeli government's decision to flout the Geneva Conventions and world opinion demonstrates how shifting are the sands upon which optimists presumed the groundwork had been laid for a resumption of the Geneva Middle East peace conference. Exposed too is the fragility of the personal rapport established last week between the Israeli and American leaders. Did Mr. Begin think that, because the Americans did not take him to task for refusing to discuss Israeli withdrawal from the occupied West Bank, his government could therefore do as it wished with that part of the usurped Palestinian homeland? If so the strongly worded message his government received yesterday should disillusion him of American agreement with his interpretation of divine providence. President Carter has set himself the task of arranging a reconvened Geneva peace conference later this year. His envoy, U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance is due in the Middle East early next month to bring the Arabs and Israelis closer to sitting down at the Geneva table. His mission is made considerably more difficult by the latest action of the Israelis compounding their occupation of the West Bank. The Arabs look to any peace talks as a means of achieving a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. They accept that inevitably this means a degree of compromise. But they expect that compromise to be two sided. From the latest action of his government it is clear that Mr. Begin expects any peace talks to ratify the status quo on the West Bank. The Arabs are prepared to reason with reasonable men, but from his actions Mr. Begin is clearly not from within these ranks.

The Message:

The result of a 10-year dream to recreate the birth of Islam

A big event, a big show, a big success and a great experiment never attempted before... This is The Message, the film which tells the story of Mohammad, Messenger of God. This film, which made a great impact in Europe and the United States, is currently appearing in Amman in two cinemas: Khayyam in English and Zahran in Arabic.

It wasn't only the complexity of filming to the epic proportion of de Mille or Griffith -- with a cast of thousands -- which made The Message such a unique production. There was the fact that Akkad insisted on two versions -- English and Arabic -- with two different casts.

The Message creates history as the first motion picture to be made in two different versions -- English and Arabic -- with two entirely different casts. An epic in the true sense of the word, it took six years to prepare and over one year to film. The Producer and Director of such a unique production is Mustapha Akkad, for whom its completion was the realisation of a 10-year dream.

known -- village of Ait Boushent, some 25 kms. from Marrakech. It was here that the director rebuilt Mecca and filmed some of the most spectacular scenes.

Akkad started by opening offices for his project (Filmeo International Productions) in Los Angeles and Beirut, and Craig then began work. Akkad spent months jetting across the world, attending endless meetings in an attempt to raise the money. Finally, through Arab International Productions, he got backing from a tripartite group in Libya, Morocco and Kuwait. The budget for this production is one of the biggest in movie history.

The reconstruction of Mecca formed the largest set of its kind since the film Cleopatra: It cost over $1 million. The amount of materials used was enormous: More than 250,000 feet of tubular scaffolding; 300 tons of local shale dug up from nearby fields for walls; 300 tons of mud, as well as straw spread over split bamboo, for other buildings; and 100 tons of plaster for textured walls. Wooden doors, gates and Arabic windows were built to replace the out-of-date tin sheets now in use. There were also dozens of interior rooms, courtyards and gardens, many of them overlooking the market place, where up to 5,000 people were gathered for some sequences.

By Irene Ramsden Special to the Jordan Times

Craig began work on the screenplay, that the dream looked like becoming reality. Craig is one of the industry's most experienced screen writers. One of his big successes is Waterloo, which starred Rod Steiger.

For Mustapha Akkad, the completion of The Message was the realisation of a 10-year dream. However, it wasn't until 1968, when writer H.A.L.

Approval of Al Azhar

Then with Craig's first draft in his hands, Akkad went with the author to Cairo, hired a hotel floor and with three top Moslem scholars from Cairo's Al Azhar University, went over the script line by line.

The Prophet: Never seen

Although filming in Morocco went smoothly, Mustapha Akkad, for political reasons, had to move the whole unit out of the country and find a new location in Libya. The desert surrounding Sebha was ideal for shooting the two battle scenes -- the Battle of Bedr (624 A.D.) in which 300 Moslems fought against 1,000 Meccans, and the Battle of Uhud (625 A.D.) which involved 1,000 Moslems against 3,000 Meccans. Dealing directly with the commander-in-chief of the Libyan army, he got 5,000 soldiers for the battle scenes. The clever feat of Akkad is to have succeeded in making the audience feel the presence of the Prophet Mohammad without showing him on the screen or letting his voice be heard -- two things forbidden by Moslem tradition. Akkad evoked every detail of the life and the message of Mohammad through the behaviour of his close relatives, friends and enemies, such as his uncle Hamza; Abu-Sofyan the powerful leader of Mecca; his wife Hind; Mohammad's friend Bilal; Khalid, who brought the Moslems to defeat at the Battle of Uhud; Zeid; Amar and many others.

The camera is prepared for the shooting of the Battle of Uhud.

At the same time, the producer/director was signing up an impressive team on the production side. Director of Photography Jack Hilliard won an Oscar for his work on Bridge over the River Kwai, while his brother David, in charge of sound, got Academy Awards for Cabaret and Fiddler on the Roof. Maurice Jarre, author of the music, won an Academy Award for his memorable scores for such films as Dr. Zhivago and Lawrence of Arabia. The other members of the production team also had vast film experience behind them.

The reconstruction of Mecca

So to capture the story of Mohammad and the riotous, violent period with its idol-worshipping demagoguery, Akkad assembled an international crew from 29 different countries. Over 40 speaking roles were involved in each version.

The Message is a film not to be missed if you want to discover the story of the Prophet Mohammad, who changed the history of the world.

MUSTAPHA AKKAD: FROM ALEPPO TO LOS ANGELES

Mustapha Akkad was born in Aleppo, Syria, where he was educated at the American College of Aleppo. He then decided to go to Los Angeles and seek a career in the cinema. He has since become an American citizen and lives in Brentwood, California. It was in 1963 that Akkad enrolled at the University of California in Los Angeles, from which he graduated with a degree in theatre arts. He then enrolled at the University of Southern California, where he received his master's degree in cinema arts. Completing his studies, Akkad was employed by the CBS-KNXT News Department and worked on the programme As Others See Us. He then produced his own documentary series and several feature films. One of his most successful was Caesar's War, a production for United Artists, which was syndicated throughout the U.S. by more than 100 T.V. stations.

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

Two Jordanian dailies Tuesday were concerned with the results of the Israeli Prime Minister's visit to the USA. A third daily commented on the anniversary of the Arab Uprising against the Turks in 1916. AL RAY, in an editorial entitled "End of Begin's visit," said that Israeli mass media for the first time on Monday admitted that Prime Minister Begin was unable to alter the viewpoint of the American president on the question of Israeli withdrawal to the pre-1967 borders. The paper continued by posing the question of how can Israeli withdrawal be accomplished when neither the Arabs are willing to fight for that end nor the USA is willing to put pressure on Israel to withdraw? The paper concluded by saying that Israeli pre-conditions for attending the Geneva conference -- refusal to withdraw from Arab lands and refusal to recognise Palestinian rights for a homeland -- would ultimately lead to the failure of the conference. The USA's refusal to put pressure on Israel and the continuous arms supply to this state leaves the Arabs with the option of having to confront Israel. AL DUSTOUR said that it is clear, in the light of their statements to Newsweek magazine, that His Majesty King Hussein and Syria's President Hafez Assad both reject Mr. Begin's suggestions on Middle East peace. The paper added that these statements are well-timed in that they force the U.S. administration to face up to its responsibilities. For they make clear that the basis for a Middie East peace are U.N. Resolutions 242 and 338. The Israeli prime minister has no right to meddle in the future of the Palestinian state once Israel withdraws from it and he has no right to object to a Palestinian entity on Palestinian soil. The paper concluded by saying that the King and President Assad thus have closed the door to any tampering with the bases of peace and to any bargaining over Palestinian land. Washington must now clarify its position after Israel has attempted to change the bases of peace. AL SHAB said that on the anniversary of the Arab Uprising against the Turks in 1916, under the leadership of the Sharif of Mecca, Hussein Ibn Ali, the Arabs should take time to recall their history and to subject themselves to critical analysis. The revolutionary will of the Great Arab Revolution, the paper said, intended to transform Arab backwardness into a renaissance and Arab disunity into an Arab unity. But this revolutionary will was confronted with the treachery of the Allied powers. However, the Arab Revolution kept its commitments, which, according to the paper, was not an error of judgement on the part of the Revolution, as some claim. The error is that the modern Arabs have diverted from the comprehensive national Arab line to a narrower and more localistic line. The paper concluded by saying that today's Arabs got ideologically lost and that some of them are embarrassed to identify with the Arab Revolution -- which means identifying with Arab history and culture. This is the Arab's greatest error, the paper said.

Prince Hassan meets engineers

AMMAN (JNA). — His Highness Crown Prince Hassan, the Viceroy, Tuesday met with public and private sector engineers and reviewed with them a number of problems related to projects they are supervising and implementing. He added that most officials -- both Arab and foreign -- he has met stressed the fact that Jordan is the natural centre for training different kinds of skills. He explained that there was a great difference between the export of expertise and that of Jordanian technology, which in the long run would be of great advantage to Jordan. He said that this expertise is not up to the standard that allows Jordan's experience to be suitable for export to neighbouring countries.

Civil aviation body makes report on airports here

AMMAN (JNA). — The Secretary General of the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO), Dr. As'ad Koteite, Tuesday said the ICAO has prepared a study about Jordan's three airports: Amman and Aqaba airports and the future Queen Alya International Airport. The study indicates that air and tourist traffic will increase considerably in the next three years, especially after the construction of Queen Alya Airport. As they will work around the clock, Jordan will be in need of technical cadres to keep them running, Dr. Koteite said. He told reporters that he discussed with His Highness Crown Prince Hassan the question of cooperation between Jordan and the ICAO in the implementation and financing of aviation projects in Jordan. He said he felt that the Jordanian government considers aviation a major sector in the economy. "I have emphasised to the Crown Prince and Jordanian officials that the ICAO will continue cooperating with Jordan by offering it material support and technical aid for its aviation programmes," Dr. Koteite added. The ICAO head said the organisation will implement a programme to train 400 Jordanian technicians. The $2.6 million training course includes scholarships abroad and provi-

Carter and Begin: the American Jewish dilemma

EDITOR'S NOTE:

Rouleau, special correspondent for "Le Monde", the French daily newspaper, has following inquiries analyses Washington's policy in the Middle East, its discussions on the American political scene and evaluates the risks of possible confrontation between President Carter and Menachem Begin.

By Eric Rouleau

are those American of who believe that a dialogue could be established between President Carter and Israeli Premier Menachem Begin. Their differences extend to all aspects of the Arab-Israeli conflict and seem to be insurmountable obstacles.

on their ideological and political conceptions are far away from one another. The comparison between Carter and Begin is not a fair one. Carter was born in a small town in Iowa, Begin was born in a village in Poland.

in a statement might appear to be too strong. American president, some of his collaborators have named him the "missionary of the Bible from which he frequently quotes. Some of his words are quoted to say that he is profoundly convinced of the right of the Jewish people to return to the land of Israel."

extension of the Jewish and its historic claims, as wished by the Likud leader will abolish hopes for peace with Arabs and Palestinians. On the other hand, the reality of a permanent peace in the Middle East, which is the priority goal of President Carter would necessarily be the creation of a Jewish state.

dream of Mr. Begin is incompatible with the realism of Mr. Carter. General opinion considers Carter's Bible to be the Brookings Institute's report in Washington, the report published in December 1975 under the title "Towards peace in the Middle East" which consists of twenty pages and is the result of six months of an intense exchange of views between sixteen personalities reputed to be experts in the field and representing several opinions.

Agreement reached in the Brookings report, notably between the Zionists and staunch supporters of the Palestinian cause has furnished President Carter not only with the substance for his Middle East policy but also a political method. One would not be surprised at the resemblance between the institute's reports and Carter's declarations on the subject when one knows that one of the Brookings Institute directors, Mr. Henry Owen had supervised the work of the "group of sixteen" who have prepared the report.

Two of the report's signatories also are President Carter's most trusted advisors on foreign policy, in which he has shown little interest in the course of his career. These are Mr. Zbigniew Brzezinski and Mr. William Quandt. The first was the post of advisor on national security at the White House previously held by Dr. Kissinger. Mr. William Quandt assistant to Mr. Brzezinski is the co-author of an excellent book on the Palestinian movement called "The politics of Palestinian Nationalism."

Mr. Carter's suggestions, like the Brookings report, are only guidelines aimed to lead the belligerents to compromise. He had by intermittent touches sketched a picture of peace as he sees it. The United States president, like

General de Gaulle does not improvise. He writes down with care all that he intends to say publicly, and learns it by heart.

If we collect his declarations and suggestions made here and there to the media and on various occasions it becomes evident that they are part of a coherent and structured peace plan parts of which are still missing for the moment. President Carter has adopted a policy opposite to that of Dr. Kissinger. He decided that a peace package deal should be worked out first and later implemented by steps after it has been approved. The step-by-step policy of Dr. Kissinger faltered after it had attained a number of its goals; to consolidate American influence in the Middle East, support fragile peace on all fronts and gain time by dividing the Arab World. Even Dr. Kissinger realised that it was high time to reverse the process. To determine the cadre, content, modalities of peace would be more easy than to have the belligerents make partial concessions, the end of which could not be foreseen by them.

Contentwise, President Carter has laid down the basis on which an agreement should be founded. Analysing the crucial interests of the two antagonist parties -- while not taking into consideration the aspirations of one or the other -- he proposes a true peace much needed by the Israelis, and the restitution of nearly all the occupied territories, a condition without which the Arab regimes could not survive.

This formula is neither original nor audacious. It has inspired many of his predecessors at the White House and meets the approval of a large majority of international public opinion. But Carter has had the merit to announce it clearly and in public.

He does not believe in secrecy, as did Dr. Kissinger in the handling of the Middle East crisis.

is. For according to him secrecy breeds feelings of mistrust and immobility between the two belligerents. By giving his peace plan a public audience he wants to progressively dispel the myths feeding Israeli and Arab public opinion, as to the demagoguery or intransigence of certain leaders in the two camps.

The Carter plan elaborately worked out in detail could be summarised in five points:

1. Quality of peace: The Arabs would recognise Israel formally as well as its right to exist. The end of the state of belligerency would be followed by a complete normalisation of relations, including liberty of movement and circulation in the economic, commercial, touristic and cultural fields. This normalisation could not be revoked or changed by any change of government in the countries signatories of the peace treaty.

2. The borders will be approximately those of 4 June 1967. Minor changes should be negotiated and approved by both parties. Taking into account the existence of offensive weapons of long duration, Israel's only guarantee for its security is the recognition by its neighbours of its final borders.

3. Various other security measures should be worked out: The creation of demilitarised zones of 20 kms. in width or more, where international forces could be stationed, the installation of electronic warning alarm systems (similar to those set up in Sinai in 1975) in addition to multilateral guarantees from the Soviet Union, the United States, Security Council, Europe or unilateral guarantees from the United States.

On this last point an official source in Washington has informed the writer that President Carter is not opposed to a contractual agreement. "Our responsibility would not be increased, the source said, as we shall in any case help Israel if its security is threatened. But a contractual agreement guaranteeing formally the security of Israel would dissuade any eventual aggressor."

4. A homeland should be arranged for the Palestinians, as an independent entity (on which President Carter looked with mistrust as it will create chances for Soviet infiltration) or as a part of Jordan or as member of a confederation including Jordan and Syria.

On the other hand, the Palestinian people should be represented at the Geneva Middle East peace conference either through its own delegates or by others representing the Palestinians. The Palestine Liberation Organisation could eventually participate in the peace talks, well informed sources say, if it recognises not only the existence of the State of Israel but also its legitimate right to exist.

Mr. Carter did not define the geographical context of the settlement of the question of Jerusalem and Gaza, Palestinian homeland. Most

5. Implementation delays. The end of the state of belligerency will take effect immediately after a treaty has been signed. The measures of normalising relations will follow by steps as Israel withdraws from occupied territories. This transition period should not extend beyond two, four or eight years according to President Carter. By this he indicates that he wishes total peace to be in effect prior to the end of a second mandate for the presidency which he intends to work for in 1980.

On the eve of the Israeli elections of May 17, President Carter thought it was not impossible to activate the mechanisms of negotiations. The three Arab leaders surrounding Israel whom he consulted in April and May had approved the suggestions contained in his plan. King Hussein and President Sadat -- the latter after a lot of convincing -- have accepted to normalise completely their relations with Israel ("during a period of five years", the Egyptian president specified). Syrian President Assad, a skillful tactician, "has given an evasive answer", Am-

ECONOSCOPE By Jawad Ahmad Speculation: Put your money where your mouth is Newcomers to Jordan are often bewildered by the signs of affluence which they see all over the place. They are specially impressed by the beautiful array of fancy houses that defy those found in Bel Air and Beverly Hills. They wonder how a relatively poor country like Jordan can afford all that.

That reminds me of myself when I first went to the United States to study. My mother insisted on buying four suits for me so that I would look nice in that foreign country. On the first day of the semester I wore a black suit with a red tie and went to class. Among my classmates I looked like a gypsy bride. Everybody thought at the time that I was the son of a very wealthy Arab who owned oil wells in his backyard.

For my part, I thought that my classmates were sloppy and did not know how to dress in a classroom.

This difference in consumption habits reflects a cultural difference which is wider in perspective. Clothing occupies an eminent position in my consumption pattern, particularly since clothing is considered one of the few essentials on which income is spent here. When people have even a little bit of cash on hand, above and beyond a quite limited income, money is spent on such essentials -- sometimes with extravagance.

In Jordan as a whole, housing is a major consumption item. Under conditions of limited income, fluctuating economies and limited needs, people tend to be myopic, or prefer current rather than deferred consumption. This of course creates that showy extravagance in the case of one of major consumption items. This extravagance is not fixed. It shifts from one consumption item to another. Once it lights on cars, then on houses, then on food, then on durable consumer goods. With every shift, an occasion for speculation arises.

Jordan is not yet completely done with real estate speculation. That spiral which came to a halt almost a year ago might start again. There is excess liquidity tucked away somewhere. It is beginning to emerge in the form of increasing demand deposits.

Where will all that liquidity go? It is difficult to predict with comfort. Yet I have a proposition to make. Economic advisors and executives in this country can direct it where they want. Why not create the atmosphere for that liquidity to go into directly productive ventures such as light, quick-yielding industries, or profitable agricultural ventures. Why not?

Let us introduce into our consumption patterns some investment which we badly need.

erican sources said, "but not completely negative". All hopes therefore were permitted on the Arab sides.

As for the Israelis, President Carter was hopeful in winning them over to his way of thinking. The advent of Mr. Shimon Peres at the head of the Maarakh (Labour Party) after the resignation of Mr. Rabin had been interpreted in Washington as a positive development. Mr. Peres, whose image was not tarnished as that of his predecessor, would have been capable of attenuating the defeat of his party. Pragmatic by nature, he would not have hesitated in conforming realities when faced with the harsh facts.

The victory of the Likud, which no one in Washington had predicted -- even the CIA -- had bewildered official circles there. Mr. Begin was known as a "terrorist" and an "extremist". Few could predict what would be his reaction when in power. Passing through Washington beginning 1977, Mr. Begin met only with Mr. Brzezinski, as President Carter was too "much occupied" to receive him. While everyone was wondering about him, Begin depicted a picture of himself which shocked and troubled a number of Americans.

They saw him on television dancing amidst Israeli settlers at Kaddoum (in the West Bank) holding tightly a Torah and promising to multiply settlements on the "liberated territories of Judea and Samaria."

In a succession of declarations, the Likud leader expounded his views on the terms of a peace settlement. Those suggestions were diametrically opposed to those of President Carter.

Apprehension reached its peak when a Likud emissary, Mr. Shmuel Katz came to Washington to reassure American officials. He explained to them that the new Israeli government shall respect the binding engagements of its predecessor in relation to U.N. resolutions 242 and that Mr. Begin's offer to meet with Arab leaders meant that "everything was negotiable."

U.N. Law of the Sea Conference faces possible U.S. withdrawal

UNITED Nations, July 26 (R). — A United States withdrawal from the U.N. conference on the Law of the Sea would be nothing short of a disaster, conference President Shirley Amersinghe said yesterday.

The Sri Lanka diplomat was commenting on a statement last week by U.S. Ambassador Elliot Richardson who said he would be advising President Carter to review the work of the conference, with U.S. withdrawal from the talks an obvious option.

"Certainly, I don't think it is at all satisfactory at this stage for any delegation to say they must review their whole attitude towards the conference," Mr. Amersinghe told a news conference.

"If that implies the possibility of withdrawal from the conference, it would be nothing short of a disaster," he said.

Mr. Amersinghe said that definite progress was made at the eight-week sea law session that adjourned on July 15.

"Ambassador Richardson himself acknowledges that in certain very controversial areas we have almost reached consensus," he said.

In Washington Mr. Richardson said his team of negotiators will be ready in a few weeks to advise President Carter on whether the United States should continue taking part in the talks.

He told the House of Representatives International Relations Committee in Washington that the U.S. review involved both substantive issues relating to seabed mining, and procedures used by the United Nations committee in drafting a compromise text on the seabed mining question.

What was still unresolved was a matter of very special concern to the U.S., the system of exploitation of the mineral wealth of the seabed, Mr. Amersinghe continued.

Commenting on Mr. Richardson's criticisms of the procedures followed in the conference, Mr. Amersinghe, who is also president of the U.N. General Assembly, said he himself had never been happy with these.

"I hope at the next session, there will be a clear understanding from the very start on how we are going to proceed," he said.

The study criticised as ineffective the Federal Emergency Administration (FEA) set up during the embargo to coordinate U.S. oil policy.

Washington, July 26 (R). — A nationally known figure should head an inquiry into whether the 15 biggest United States oil companies cheated American consumers during the Arab oil embargo in 1973-74, a government agency report urged yesterday.

The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) called for the investigation to be set up immediately.

"There has to be a major effort in the shortest possible time to once and for all make a determination if the public was overcharged during the embargo, SEC's top enforcement official, Stanley Sporkin, wrote in the report.

Representatives of Switzerland's Neue Zuercher Zeitung, and the Sueddeutsche Zeitung and ARD Radio and Television of West Germany, were told that otherwise they could regard the letter as an "official warning of the need to vacate the premises you occupy within two months."

Foreigners expect many more such warnings.

Diplomats say UPDK argues that rents abroad have gone up by about 200 per cent in the last 10 years.

The new rents would mean foreigners paid more than 10 times the rate charged Soviet tenants, and the Soviet Union constantly claims to have no inflation, foreign residents say.

Rent for a typical three-room apartment would go up from the equivalent of £77 a month to £173. A roomier, three-bedroom flat, also furnished would cost more than £300 a month, compared with £163.

Offices are also affected.

Herr Wolfgang Hauptmann of ARD said all three correspondents had written back rejecting the ultimatum but stressing they wanted to negotiate the new rents.

Most Western and Third World embassies were told by UPDK last month it was ready to negotiate rents with them individually, a different approach from that used with the correspondents yesterday.

Bomb explodes along Alaska pipeline

ANCHORAGE, July 26 (R). — A bomb damaged part of the installation of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline late last night but left the pipe itself unharmed, a state police spokesman said today.

The spokesman said the device was placed near the pipeline at a spot off the Elliott Highway, north of Fairbanks.

No information was available on the type of bomb or whether it had a timing device and on one who claimed responsibility for the detonation, he said.

Peruvian miners, bankers mount strike for increased wages, full union rights

LIMA, July 26 (R). — Peru's tense labour situation looked more strained today with miners and bank workers set to strike.

Against the deportation of their union leader, Victor Cuadros Paredes, to France, Centromin accounts for half Peru's mining exports.

The union has also called for the re-establishment of full union rights and the repeal of a government decree which authorises firms to fire striking workers.

About 40 per cent of the 13,000 work force of the state owned mining corporation, Centromin, obeyed a union strike call yesterday for wage rises to offset last month's stiff price increases on food, public transport and petrol.

Meanwhile the Federation of Bank Employees, an affiliate of the powerful communist-led General Confederation of Peruvian Workers (CGTP), threatened the military government with another general strike.

The government has gotten tougher in the face of mounting protests against the rising cost of living.

Last week's general strike followed weeks of rioting in key provincial cities where an estimated 10 people were reported to have died in clashes with security forces.

Seven others were killed during the strike when troops opened fire on rioters in shanty-towns surrounding the capital. Hundreds of labour leaders who backed the strike were arrested.

More were expected to join the strike today despite a tough government statement threatening to dismiss those not back at work within 24 hours. The miners are also protesting

The Bank Workers' Union, which has 20,000 members, has demanded the immediate release of all union leaders arrested after last Tuesday's general strike which paralysed Lima.

The government has already ordered a reduction in the price of bread and pasta and a freeze in the price of butter, milk and oil.

Carter administration rejects Sen. Byrd's request to defer AWACS planes sale to Iran

WASHINGTON, July 26 (R). — The Carter administration told a Senate panel yesterday it planned to go ahead with the proposed sale of seven advanced radar planes to Iran despite a request by Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd to defer it until next year.

Sen. Byrd wrote to President Carter over the weekend saying it would be impossible for the Senate to give the $1.2 billion sale the careful consideration it deserved before Congress recessed on August 5.

Witnesses from the Defence and State Departments deflected the sale against charges by the General Accounting Office (GAO), the congressional watchdog agency, that the sophisticated equipment might fall into hostile hands and endanger U.S. security. The GAO said that alternative radar systems had not been considered fully.

The planes -- called airborne warning and control system (AWACS) aircraft -- are essentially Boeing 707s fitted with advanced electronic equipment.

Sen. Byrd wrote to President Carter over the weekend saying it would be impossible for the Senate to give the $1.2 billion sale the careful consideration it deserved before Congress recessed on August 5.

The administration's rejection of the Senate leader's request was revealed by a subcommittee aide after a closed meeting of the Foreign Relations Subcommittee on Foreign Assistance.

The administration called the General Accounting Office report inaccurate and misleading.

The government has already ordered a reduction in the price of bread and pasta and a freeze in the price of butter, milk and oil.

Lance receives vote of confidence from Senate committee

WASHINGTON, July 26 (R). — U.S. Budget Director Bert Lance, one of President Carter's closest confidants, received a fresh vote of confidence yesterday from a Senate committee after defending a $3.4 million personal bank loan he obtained.

Mr. Lance, head of the White House Office of Management and Budget (OMB), denied anything improper in the loan from the First National Bank of Chicago two weeks before the Carter administration took office on January 20.

Erich von Marbod, acting director of the U.S. Defence Security Assistance Agency, said the plane would help assure that Iran maintained a modern air force which in the 1980s and 1990s would be equal to that of any hostile regional force except the Soviet Union.

Following are official exchange rates in effect at the start of today's business day, as set by the Central Bank of Jordan.

He also denied he was given special consideration for the loan because the Georgia bank he headed had opened a non-interest-bearing account in the Chicago institution a month before he was granted the loan.

The controller, who regulates national banks is "conducting an inquiry over possible violations of the national bank act," Mr. Ribicoff said.

He said the Iranians were apprehensive of Soviet support for some of its neighbours, especially Iraq.

The first column is how much you would receive in Jordanian fils for selling a unit of the foreign currency, while the second column denotes how much it would cost you to buy a unit of the foreign currency.

Mr. Lance said two weeks ago he would lose some $1.6 million if forced to sell the stock at present depressed prices of around $12.

But Mr. Mitchell indicated at the weekend that he had found a buyer willing to pay more than the trading price of the stock. Mr. Lance said this was not unusual in the sales of large blocks of bank stock.

The House International Relations Committee has scheduled a hearing on the sale for Thursday, at which Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Deputy Secretary of Defence Charles Duncan are due to testify.

The following are the buying and selling rates for leading world currencies against the dollar at the close of inter-bank trading on the London Foreign Exchange Market yesterday. Tourist rates will differ from those quoted below.

Other committee members, both from Mr. Lance's Democratic Party and from the Republican opposition, said Mr. Lance had adequately answered the newspaper allegations.

Sen. Ribicoff told reporters his committee has ended its probe of Mr. Lance's bank loan but will give the transcript of the hearing to the U.S. controller of the currency.

Mr. Lance said the controller "will find nothing but a straightforward business transaction" in the bank account.

EEC agrees on loan to Lebanon

BRUSSELS, July 26 (R). — Common Market foreign ministers today agreed in principle to an EEC loan to help the reconstruction of Lebanon but did not fix the amount community officials said here. Earlier EEC sources said the community was considering a loan of up to $55 million to help repair some of last year's civil war damage.

UAE considers power project for Pakistan

Not received

ABU DHABI, July 26 (R). — An Abu Dhabi economic mission will leave here for Pakistan on Aug. 4 to discuss the possible financing of a power project for Karachi, it was officially reported here today. The Emirates News Agency said the project was vital for the city of Karachi and would produce an extra 125 megawatts powered by gas turbines. Funds for the project might be provided by the Abu Dhabi Fund for Arab Economic Development the state's foreign aid agency.

North Yemen, UAE discuss aid

ABU DHABI, July 26 (R). — North Yemen State Minister Mohammad Salem Basendwa started talks here today on further aid to his country from the Abu Dhabi Fund for Arab Economic Development. Mr. Basendwa, who arrived here yesterday, was seeking finance for water, sewerage, port, agricultural, animal husbandry and cement production projects, officials said. Experts from the fund will visit North Yemen later this year to study the projects on the spot and the fund has agreed to look into Yemeni requests for extra funds to finance the shortfall in the costs on projects already receiving Abu Dhabi aid, they added. Among such projects were water works for Sana', the Yemeni capital, and an agricultural scheme for the southern mountain region, they said.

OPEC ministers will meet in Vienna Aug. 4

CYPRUS, July 26 (R). — Finance ministers from the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) will meet in Vienna on August 4 to discuss further aid allocations to developing countries, according to the influential "Middle East Economic Survey".

The weekly said the OPEC special fund has so far granted loans worth $196.8 million to poor countries which have been identified by the United Nations as the most seriously affected by recent economic stresses.

GATT CONFERENCE ENDS IN DEADLOCK

GENEVA, July 26 (R). — A major clash on textiles between industrialised and developing nations seems certain later this year after a 50-nation meeting seeking a new tariff and trade agreement broke up Monday night in deadlock.

Developing countries -- notably Brazil, India and Egypt -- want the present agreement which expires at the end of this year, renewed without change. The European Community countries, however, want it to include provisions for "reasonable departures" from the former agreement, in the form of bilateral accords.

As the textile committee of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) adjourned in deadlock last night without setting a date for resumption, its chairman, GATT Director General Oliver Long warned that failure to agree this year could lead to "disintegration of international trade."

Major textile importers -- the United States and the EEC -- told reporters here yesterday they were asking Mr. Long to open a new GATT "protocol" on textiles for signature as from Dec. 15 by any country.

Soviets raise rents on foreign residents

MOSCOW, July 26 (R). — Soviet authorities issued eviction warnings yesterday in a drive to bring rent increases of up to 120 per cent for foreigners living in Moscow.

Three Western journalists received what foreigners think will prove the first of many warnings of eviction in the dispute, which began early this year.

Hundreds of diplomats and foreign businessmen and journalists then received demands for higher rents from the Diplomatic Corps Service Bureau (UPDK), the foreigners' "landlord" in the Soviet capital.

Most responded by calling for discussion -- and continued to pay at the old rate.

UPDK broke a long silence yesterday, writing to the correspondents of three Western news organisations that the new rent agreements be concluded within 20 days.

Representatives of Switzerland's Neue Zuercher Zeitung, and the Sueddeutsche Zeitung and ARD Radio and Television of West Germany, were told that otherwise they could regard the letter as an "official warning of the need to vacate the premises you occupy within two months."

Foreigners expect many more such warnings.

Diplomats say UPDK argues that rents abroad have gone up by about 200 per cent in the last 10 years.

The new rents would mean foreigners paid more than 10 times the rate charged Soviet tenants, and the Soviet Union constantly claims to have no inflation, foreign residents say.

Rent for a typical three-room apartment would go up from the equivalent of £77 a month to £173. A roomier, three-bedroom flat, also furnished would cost more than £300 a month, compared with £163.

Offices are also affected.

Herr Wolfgang Hauptmann of ARD said all three correspondents had written back rejecting the ultimatum but stressing they wanted to negotiate the new rents.

Most Western and Third World embassies were told by UPDK last month it was ready to negotiate rents with them individually, a different approach from that used with the correspondents yesterday.

Iran receives boost in drive to bypass Western companies and sell directly to nations

TEHRAN, (R). — Iran's drive to sell oil directly to other nations, bypassing Western companies, has received an unexpected boost from the Soviet Union, which has for the first time asked this country for one million tons of crude.

Last month, Brazil agreed to quadruple oil imports from Iran by December 1978 and for three years thereafter will purchase 25 per cent of its oil needs from this country.

Though the Soviet Union requested the oil last December, news of the move was disclosed only five months later by the Soviet trade representative in Iran, Viktor Slavkov. He said the government had not at that time responded to the Soviet request.

The oil, he explained, was for delivery to terminals on the Black Sea. If the deal went through, more Iranian crude would be purchased.

Mr. Slavkov did not explain why the Soviet Union -- which buys crude also from Syria and the Libyan Jamahiriyah -- wants Iranian crude in addition to natural gas which is piped from Iran's southern fields to the Soviet border town of Astara.

Informed sources said the two countries were discussing an oil barter deal under which the Russians would build a machine-tool plant in the north-eastern province of Khorasán.

The Soviet Union has already built a machine-tool plant and a steel complex in gas barter. The pipeline, which delivered 10 million cubic metres of gas last year, was built with Soviet credit and repaid in gas.

Iran is also believed to have paid in gas for a variety of items of Soviet military equipment including armoured personnel carriers, amphibious vehicles, trucks and artillery.

But the government has so far failed to barter oil for sophisticated U.S. military fighter jets, although it successfully concluded a £400 million oil-for-missiles deal with the British Aircraft Corporation last November.

The news of new markets welcomed by the state-owned National Iranian Oil Company (NIOC) which has been actively seeking customers in an attempt to reduce the hold of the Oil Service Company of Iran (OSCO), the main extractors and exporters of Iranian crude.

Good news has come recently from Bulgaria, Finland and East Germany.

Bulgarian Ambassador Kiril Stover said his country, which imported 400,000 tons of crude from Iran last year, will buy 200,000 tons more this year.

Finland said it would like to double its purchase of Iranian crude which last year totalled 700,000 tons.

East Germany, which imports 15 million tons from the Soviet Union annually, last year bought 375,000 tons of oil from Iran and is expected to step up purchases this year.

In the first quarter of this year Iran sold 1.9 million barrels of crude to Spain, replacing Saudi Arabia as the main supplier of oil to that country.

He stated that offshore oil in the area in the first year -- 1975 -- totalled 1.1 million tons. Last year's production was 12 million tons and in the first half of this year it was 17 million tons.

The forecasts were: 40-45 million tons in 1977, 60-70 million tons next year, 80-85 million tons in 1979 and 100-120 million tons in 1980, he said.

"Annual production in the years 1980-1985 is expected to be in the range of 100-150 million tons."

The minister added: "For fields already in production or under development the unit cost of production is estimated to range from $3 to $9 a barrel at 1976 prices, including exploration, development and operating costs and interest."

Both vulnerable. South deals. NORTH ♠ A 7 6 4 2 ♥ Q 8 4 ♦ A 8 3 ♣ K 4

West's spade lead looked to the world like a singleton, so declarer rose with dummy's ace. Since he could afford to lose a spade, declarer cashed the king and ace of clubs, then tried to ruff a club in dummy with the eight. East overruffed, cashed the king of spades and gave his partner a ruff for a two-trick set.

South defended his play by claiming that he couldn't afford to ruff with the queen of trumps in case the trump suit split 4-1. Surely that was more likely than a 3-2 club split? True enough, but declarer failed to realize that he could have claimed his contract if trumps were divided no worse than 4-1.

After winning the ace of spades, declarer should draw one round of trumps with the king. When both defenders follow, all declarer has to do is pull the remaining trumps and concede a trick to the king of spades. He wins any return in his hand, cashes his high spade, enters dummy and ruffs a spade. That sets up dummy's fifth spade for a club discard while declarer still has an entry to the hand in one of the minor suits.

By establishing dummy's side suit instead of trying for a ruff, declarer has no problem limiting his losses to the king of spades.

In the immortal words of Alexander Pope, "A little learning is a dangerous thing." Declarer knew just enough about the probabilities of distribution to make him overlook a virtually ironclad line which would have landed his slam contract.

North-South conducted an orderly auction to their best spot. South felt his hand was too strong to open one no trump because of his good five-card major and fine intermediates. After North responded in spades, South manufactured a temporizing bid of two clubs to give his partner an opportunity to clarify his holding. When North vigorously supported hearts, South checked on aces, then settled in the small slam when he found his side was off an ace.

But remains committed to defence

U.S. begins to withdraw from South Korea next year

SEOUL, July 26 (R). — The United States said today it would begin withdrawing ground troops from South Korea next year but remained committed to the defence of the country.

U.S. Defence Secretary Harold Brown told a press conference the withdrawal would result in a more stable situation in Northeast Asia and South Korea would continue to be protected by the U.S. nuclear umbrella.

Agreement on the pullout of 33,000 men was reached during two days of talks here between Mr Brown and South Korean officials.

The United States said that in return it would help South Korea build up its own defences.

South Korea's Defence Minister Suh Jong-chul told the press conference that what he called these compensatory measures were "constructive and substantive".

While ground forces will be withdrawn, the Americans would boost their air force presence and naval forces would remain in the area, a joint communiqué said.

American officials said meanwhile that the U.S. force of 60 Phantom fighter-bombers in South Korea would be increased 20 to 25 per cent.

The promise that the United States remained committed to the defence of South Korea came in a letter from President Carter that Mr. Brown delivered to President Park Chung-hee yesterday.

"Neither North Korea nor any other country should have any doubts about the continuing strength of this commitment," Mr. Carter wrote in the letter which South Korean officials described as "a most valuable document."

It added that the U.S.-led United Nations Command, a signatory to the 1953 agreement that ended the Korean war, would continue to function as there was no "viable alternative arrangement" to the armistice.

After the departure of 6,000 men in 1978, the communiqué said, the headquarters and two brigades of the Second Infantry Division would remain in Korea until the final phase of the withdrawal.

The U.S. Ambassador to South Korea Mr. Richard Sneider, was quoted earlier today as saying: "We are not pulling out of here... We are not about to commit hara kiri. It is as much in our interest as the Koreans to do the job in the right way."

The proposals would have ensured greater representation of Socialists and Communists on the committee, made up of four members each of the Congress and Senate, the presidents of both houses and the president of the Cortes.

The Communist proposal was defeated by 169 votes to 140, while the Socialist plan was beaten 183 to 133.

Californian accused of "soliciting to murder"

WESTMINSTER, California, July 26 (R). — A man accused of luring two women into the desert to photograph them being tortured and dismembered appeared in court here yesterday.

The prosecutor alleged that Mr. Fred Douglas, 48, owned a set of torture instruments "which would make the Marquis de Sade envious."

Mr. Douglas pleaded "not guilty" to charges of attempted murder and solicitation of murder. A further court hearing was set for Aug. 3.

The case has attracted widespread publicity following a scandal over so-called "snuff movies" in which it was alleged that a film shown in a New York pornographic cinema was of a woman being murdered.

In the current case, police said they found no movie equipment in Mr. Douglas' possession, and they described photographic apparatus found in his van as "rather amateurish".

His attorney, Mr. Patrick Magers, said yesterday there was no solid evidence that Mr. Douglas intended to commit murder when he was detained last Wednesday. He was arrested while taking two women police officers he thought to be prostitutes to a site near Death Valley for a pornographic photo-taking session.

Once the conflict broke out there was little chance of escorts being found for amphibious troop carriers, and Norwegian airfields would be a target for enemy missiles on the first day of hostilities, the report remarked.

"It need hardly be said that to attempt opposed landings on the Norwegian coast would be hazardous in the extreme."

The committee said Britain's stance was inflexible compared to some of its allies and this could limit its scope for transition from a short to a longer war.

The Defence Ministry had a set period of days -- the number was kept secret -- in which it could complete reinforcement and mobilisation plans.

The committee said it was hard to reconcile the ministry's assurances that this delay had been shortened in the last six years "with the cuts in capability in recent years, notably that of 50 per cent in the air transport force."

United Nations Command, a signatory to the 1953 agreement that ended the Korean war, would continue to function as there was no "viable alternative arrangement" to the armistice.

Muzorewa: Conference must decide franchise question

SALISBURY, July 26 (R). — Bishop Abel Muzorewa, most "moderate" of Rhodesia's leading black nationalists, said today a round-table conference of black and white leaders should decide on the electoral franchise for a new constitution.

Bishop Muzorewa said in an interview with Reuters today that he believes in universal suffrage, but would not insist that Premier Ian Smith's white minority government accept the point before a constitutional conference.

"I think it does not help us very much to continue to shout at each other about one-man, one-vote, the Methodist bishop said. "I have reached a point where I think that this must now be left to a round-table meeting. The discussions are the prime point."

Mr. Smith, who recently called on Aug. 31 general election to seek a fresh mandate from Rhodesia's present mainly-white electorate, has declared himself ready to accept a form of black majority rule.

But he describes Anglo-American proposals for universal suffrage as completely unacceptable, and wants the franchise based on education and property qualification.

Bishop Muzorewa leads the United African National Council (UNAC) which claims the support of the vast majority of Rhodesia's blacks.

He said today there has been no positive response to his proposal for any quarter.

"If other people are as concerned -- as I and my party are, I believe there should be some response soon from other parties," he said.

The situation in Rhodesia will be grave if there is no political settlement within the next six months, he said.
